How's
Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficiency.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.
As a general family remedy for dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever see anything else, and have never been disappointed. It is the best and most perfect cure for all diseases of the stomach and bowels.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

AGITATING REFORMS IN HONEYMOON
CUSTOMS IN ENGLAND.

The Franchise for English women—A New Occupation for Women—On the Wheel. Fashionable Footwear—Items of Interest for the Fair.

The question of reform in the wedding journey is now being agitated by leaders of English society. They maintain that much time and money are thrown away needlessly on this ideal trip, and that not only is there no adequate compensation for this loss, but that frequently the honeymoon is thereby robbed of its blissful serenity.

A dozen letters have appeared this week in a London daily suggesting that the honeymoon should be curtailed and simplified. One humorous writer, who dates his letter from Grosvenor square, the most fashionable part of London, declares emphatically that the newly married husband fires of the honeymoon. He may get very tired of it, or only just a little, but he fires of it. He may idolize, adore, love or merely like his young wife, but by whichever gradation of sentiment he is attached to her he still tires of the honeymoon. Sometimes, indeed, it is added, the more he loves his spouse the more the wedding journey annoys him.

The period of betrothal is an irritating and annoying one for the man. The wedding preparations, so highly appreciated by the bride, are a source of continual worry for the bridegroom. From the discussion over the bride's dress to the gifts, from the social to the civil ceremonies, everything represents minute and assiduous labor; so much so, that unless he is aided by immense love, great longing or strong interest he could not persevere in his task. Therefore the bridegroom, when the wedding day arrives, is in a state of acute irritability (no man can possibly be tranquil on this day unless he is an imbecile), and the departure for the honeymoon, always harnessed by complications, delays and confusion, only augments his annoyance.

According to another correspondent it is next to impossible for things to go smoothly and pleasantly during the honeymoon. The young wife observes her partner. He is too free and easy. He thinks she is cold toward her; if he is humble in demeanor he gets too proud; if he is disposed to give her a little liberty, she is uneasy; if he is jealous, she is unhappy. And the opportunities for such observation and reflection occur continually in the course of the honeymoon.

It is true that there is love to overrule all these little disagreements. But alas! it is impossible to love deeply on the wedding tour. And so both bride and bridegroom are dissatisfied with the journey, and both are glad to return home.—London Cor. Chicago Herald.

The Franchise for English women.

Lady Henry Somerset's visit to America has already had great results. It has brought home to her own mind an overwhelming conviction that women must play an active and prominent part in all moral reforms, and that they can never fully exert their legitimate influence unless they enjoy the parliamentary as well as the municipal franchise. Under the influence of this conviction Lady Henry has effected something like a revolution in the British Women's Temperance association. She has persuaded them to favor women's suffrage, with a view to more active temperance effort than temperance women in this country have hitherto made. Under the same deep conviction she herself has consented to be one of the progressive candidates for the executive committee of the Ladies' Liberal National association.

The progressive candidates are all in favor of making women's suffrage an essential part of the work of the organization. Lady Henry Somerset has seen that women in America have in some directions rendered greater services to temperance reform and other moral movements than the women of England have hitherto attempted. There is every prospect that under her wise and powerful initiative we are about to see a great development of women's work in the direction of Christian legislation.—London Methodist Times.

A New Occupation for Women.

It is becoming the custom in all retail dry goods establishments to employ a person whose sole business is to write the advertisements used day by day, also to get up all pamphlets, circulars, posters, catalogues, in fact, to see to all the advertisement matter used by the house. In the few cases known to the writer where women have filled this important place they have been eminently successful. It is work peculiarly fitted to women, for if there is one thing in this world that womankind agree in loving it certainly is dry goods, and it is second nature to women to write and simply talking about dry goods.

Of course the writer must know what to say, how to say it, and above all when enough has been said; must be able to say much in a few words and make those words "telling"; must exert her power of ingenuity to put her announcements in attractive forms that will catch the eyes of the readers as they glance over the paper. The chief object of the advertisement is to place the business written of before the reader in the best possible light. All this comes with a very little experience, a little study of the matter. Some familiarity of the routine will soon put one entirely at ease.—Virginia Frazee in Ladies' Home Journal.

Several young Russian women students at the medical school in Moscow have volunteered their services as nurses to the typhoid stricken people in the province of Samara.

The latter weight is part nowadays of the furnishing of all well regulated writing tables, and at the shops they are shown in varied and attractive styles.

Ward McNeilly returned from Webber lake Monday. He says the fishing at Fore-say's dam can't be beat, and that the hotel at the lake is crowded to its fullest capacity. He says George Styles, the genial landlord, finds it impossible to accommodate the large number of California tourists who desire to visit that lovely little mountain lake.
Thaxter's Minstrels.
Thaxter's Minstrels and Dick & Harris Comedy Company were greeted last night with a crowded house, not a seat being left vacant in the Opera House. Combining comedy with minstrelsy is a new feature and a pleasing and sparkling innovation. The singing by Messrs. Fillman, Raymond Moore and Joe was fine, and each received well merited applause. After the first encore of Dick & Harris the scenes were shifted and the next on the program common, but the audience refused to cease the enthusiastic applause until Dick appeared and rendered another song. The singing of the fairer sex was good and was a charming feature. Mr. Thaxter has spared no pains or expense to secure first-class comedians. They kept the house in a constant roar of laughter. The reference to silver in the T. R. R. Deon De-Robora made a great hit, and to hear the applause one would have thought there was not a person in the audience who was not a strong silver advocate. There was not a stick in the entire performance.
Selling Whisky to Indians.
Mrs. Concho, proprietress of the Inverness House, had a hearing yesterday before U. S. Commissioner Waldo, U. S. District Attorney Whitcomb appearing for the prosecution, on a charge of selling whisky to Indians, and was held to appear before the U. S. Grand Jury. The officers state that Mrs. Concho has been caught in the act of selling the Indians whisky on three occasions prior to this, as she took little or no precaution to conceal his actions. Previous to this she was arrested and brought before Justice Linn and on motion of the District Attorney was released on promising not to repeat the offense.
Railroad Wreck.
Yesterday's passenger train from the west which is due here at 8 o'clock, did not arrive until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The delay was caused by the wrecking of a freight train at the west end of the American river bridge. The accident is supposed to have been caused by a broken rail, which caused the engine and several cars to leave the track. Four box cars were turned completely over and now lie in the ditch. The bridge was damaged to such an extent that it was necessary to prop it up with ties and timbers to enable the passenger train to pass. Fortunately no one was hurt.
Fig Syrup Meeting.
The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Coconino Company of San Francisco, California Fig Syrup Company, Coconino Commercial Company and Golden Gate Advertising Company was held yesterday, and after the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting the following officers of the California Fig Syrup Company were elected for the ensuing year: R. E. Queen, President, Manager and Trustee; T. E. Haydon, Vice President and Trustee; J. J. Quinn, Secretary and Trustee; J. F. Condon and W. T. Fonda, Trustees. After the election of officers the meeting adjourned until to-day.

NATIONAL MINING CONGRESS.
A Spirited Session at Helena, Montana.
The proceedings of the National Mining Congress, held at Helena, Montana, of which only a brief synopsis was telegraphed, are published in full in the Helena Independent. The session lasted three days, and as everything pertaining to the silver question is of interest, each day's proceedings will be published in the Journal.
The Congress was called to order by Chairman Chase, who addressed the Assembly. The feeling of the delegates and the audience on free coinage was very evident while Chairman Chase was making his address. Every reference to the subject favoring free and unlimited coinage was loudly applauded, while particularly strong passages were received with replies of "That's so, that's so." Gov. Toole's popularity in his home was evidenced by the warm reception he received when he advanced to the front of the stage to deliver his address of welcome. His reference to his lack of practical experience in financial affairs was received with much laughter; but when he referred to the prevalent labor troubles and suggested that the questions to be considered had a bearing on them, there were some who expected he would go further, but he did not specify any particular case, closing with a cordial welcome to the visitors.
Francis G. Newlands, who responded to Gov. Toole, is a very pleasant talker, with a strongly marked face. He struck a popular chord.
When he referred to the power the North-west could wield if it acted as a unit, and his illustration of its political strength by such action was received with great applause.
Col. Chase makes an excellent temporary chairman, pushing business with dispatch, and at the same time having his little joke on the side. He is a venerable looking gentleman, with snow white hair and beard, but full of activity, and a firm believer in the destiny of the Great West and Northwest.
The Committee on Permanent Organization is composed of seventeen members, but at the meeting yesterday there were only twelve present. Five of these members favored Patterson, of Colorado, for Permanent Chairman, while seven voted for Newlands, of Nevada.
Mr. Hauser, of the Executive Committee, did not make any speech when he called the second session of the National Mining Congress to order. He told of the action of the Executive Committee in naming temporary officers, and then introduced Champion S. Chase, of Nebraska, who spoke as follows:
Gentlemen of the Congress, and ladies too: I desire to express my thanks, not only for myself, but for my State as well, for this honor. It is with a great mistrust of my ability to do so, but your preliminary deliberations as to guide them to all respects properly, that I have accepted the appointment so humbly conferred upon me by the Executive Committee of this Congress. I am as well aware as you are that the session upon which we meet, the particular time at which we meet, is perhaps, in a way, peculiarly, very opportune, and if this change is not as to us we are to be congratulated in the fact that to-day in Washington the same subject, or substantially the same, that we have met here to discuss, is being considered, and many of the delegates who were selected to appear here, are looking to Washington, the source of power and the source of relief, for that power to be exercised and that relief to be given in reference to the money question of this country which we so much desire. [Applause.]
I will not detain you at this time with my remarks concerning the subject which we have met to consider, except to say to you that I am with the great majority of our mining States on the silver question, past and present. [Applause.]
He then turned to the question of public opinion in mining on to A HIGH TIDE.
Which is going to overwhelm all opposition, and that if we only stand firm and are brave and bold and independent in the position we have taken for the redemption of the currency of the United States from its present degraded condition, and in our endeavor to make it such as every American would be proud of throughout the world, wherever he goes, as well as at home, we shall win in the end. [Applause.]
Mr. Chase called upon Governor Toole, who, in a warm
ADDRESS OF WELCOME.
Said, among other good things on the charge that if free and unlimited coinage to the United States, that the whole of Europe would proceed with energy and dispatch to dump its entire product of silver into the United States. This charge is made by distinguished people, high in authority, and with such seriousness and solemnity that it is taken as confessed by people in many quarters.
It is related that Charles II, of England, with great seriousness, propounded to the philosophers of the Royal Society the question, why a dead fish is heavier than a live one, and the loyal sages, believing that the dictum of a monarch, even upon questions of science, was necessarily true, hastened to adduce reasons which appeared to them to be a satisfactory solution of the difficulty. After a while a shrewd thinker said, "Is it really true that a dead fish is heavier than a live one?" whereupon the monarch replied, "Now, sir, you are on the right track."
Distinguished and learned gentlemen here will tell us whether it is true or not that it is practicable or possible for Europe to give up its silver product, and if it is, whether the silver which we would receive would increase the volume of money, per capita, to more than is necessary to meet the demand of our population. Directly connected with this is the problem how to bridge
THE WIDENING CHASM.
Between capital and labor? How to prevent the growing conflict between co-operative combination and individual freedom? There is a prevalent political philosophy that all of these evils will right themselves in due course of time. Let us hope that the wonderful elasticity of our composite race will justify the prediction, but I am cautious enough to believe that as long as less than three per cent. of the entire population possess more than two-thirds of the wealth of the world, that this struggle will go on growing in intensity and gathering momentum until no power can resist the fury of the contention. There is no method by which hoarded wealth, acquired under the forms of law, can be diffused through the channels of trade and commerce, except by the consent of those who own it; but there is a palpable and easy remedy, in my humble opinion, by enlarging the volume of currency so that the average man will have the incentive to labor for more than a mere existence, I maintain that with the present

RESTRICTED VOLUME OF CURRENCY,
And lodged where it is, in the hands of a few, relief is impracticable, if not impossible, by any other method. However this may be, these and kindred questions are submitted to you for consideration, discussion and determination. Wishing you a harmonious session and having full confidence in your wisdom, I predict that your action, whatever it may be, will sooner or later be vindicated by the whole people. I renew the welcome already extended to this hospitable State.
THE TOWER OF THE WEST.
Mr. Newlands in responding on the part of the delegates said:
It was a matter of gratification to observe the growth of public sentiment in the mining States and the gradual growth of co-hesive action; to consult with each other in regard to matters of common interest and to unite upon a common line of action. The idea of the restoration of the power of the great Northwest has been a favorite topic with me in my own State. That is to say, the idea that the Northwest of to-day should equal in strength and power the Northwest of forty or fifty years ago, when the leading statesmen of the nation came from States as far out on the frontier as those we represent now. We all know what the strength of Benton, Cass, and Lincoln and Douglas was. We all know the strength of the West and the Northwest was then the strength which was productive of
UNANIMITY OF ACTION.
The strength which we can emulate to-day with results as convincing if we only make up our minds to emulate. [Applause.]
Now, my friends, I am from a very little State—great in dimension, small in population—Nevada. But I am proud of the State and proud of its champions.
Some time ago I was in conversation with a prominent official in Washington and urging some line of policy with reference to Nevada. He said to me, "Don't you think that such a small State as Nevada has had about enough?" I replied yes, if you consider our population, and no, if you consider the strength, vigor and genius of our men. [Applause.]
Some time later I was in London discussing the great silver question with a man who represents us prominently abroad. He claimed to be a bi-metallicist. This gentleman seemed to think the West had too much to say with reference to national policy, and it seemed especially obnoxious to him that
LITTLE NEVADA
Should be so exceedingly forward in questions which concerned not only the United States but the world. I replied to him that he seemed to have some objection to the source of this agitation. The gentleman thought that such movements should be started in such money centers as Lombard Street in London or Wall Street in New York. I replied to him that great actions have not failed because of the obscurity of their origin. The great Christian religion which has conquered the world had its source in humble Galilee, and in this region of Congress, the Senate and the House alternately voting for free coinage, and a free coinage bill only beaten by the determined use of executive power.
You know that Mr. Cleveland, elected upon a platform which called for the use of gold and silver, had not taken his seat before he addressed a letter to Congress, advising Congress to repeal the only law which in existence for the coinage of the silver dollar—the Bland Act of 1878. You remember that four years later Harrison was elected upon a platform which called for the use of gold and silver, the Democratic platform of that campaign, in obedience to the will of its master, being entirely silent on the subject. You remember the attempts that were made by the Republican administration partially to meet, but really to evade, the issue. You remember the famous
BULLION REDEMPTION LAW
Which made silver a mere commodity, which was favored by Secretary Windom, as the weak friend of silver, but which was finally amended so as to relieve silver in a large degree of its quality as a mere commodity, and restore it in part to an enlarged monetary use.
You are familiar with the history of the convention which have recently met, both of which have been obliged to yield to the prevailing sentiment of the country, and to express their will in favor of bi-metallic coinage, a thing which has not been explicitly done in any convention for years, and yet which studiously avoided to declare themselves in favor of free coinage, though free silver was not even presented with a declaration in either platform. You know that as matters stand, judging by the past and by experience, that if either Mr. Harrison or Mr. Cleveland is elected, and a free coinage bill is passed,
A PRESIDENTIAL VETO
Will be interposed. You know that partially as a result of this action upon the part of the two National Conventions, a third party's convention has been called, known as the People's Party Convention, which has declared itself in unmistakable terms for silver, but which has presented the country a candidate who has been presented in races before and beaten, and whose name does not carry with it the prestige of victory.
Now, this is an embarrassing position for the friends of silver. We know the sentiment of the country. We know the sentiment of the country. We know that we can carry Congress against the powers and the blasphemers of Wall street, but we feel that the one candidate who is unequivocally pledged to silver cannot be elected, and we fear that if either of the other two is elected a Presidential veto will be interposed.
Now, what is the duty of the friends of silver, the representatives of the mining States, who not only have the interests of the producing classes, but also the interests upon which their States are founded, to preserve? This has been a matter of serious reflection to me, as I presume it has been to every earnest friend of silver. You are familiar with the methods of electing Presidents. You know that when the constitution was adopted it was the intention that
THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE
Should be composed of the best representative men of the various States, who should meet in a deliberative assembly and there vote for the man for President, irrespective of party, and without party organization, who would best serve the interests of the country. In that way, if I recollect right, George Washington was elected, and it was not until some years subsequent to the

ABSOLUTELY PURE
Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report.
It is difficult for me to express my appreciation of the honor which you have conferred upon me. When the unexpected announcement was made to me yesterday afternoon that I might be selected as the presiding officer of this congress, I at first declined, stating that I would prefer to be on the floor in the contest, which might arise, rather than in a position of a quasi-judicial character, and preferred that this position should be given to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado, whose great labor in the cause of silver entitled him to it. That gentleman, however, saw fit to so strenuously decline it as myself, and in the dilemma there was nothing for me to do but to accept. I must say that my acceptance was rather strengthened this morning by reading over the speech of Mr. Searles of California, who was selected to preside at the first session of the mining congress, held last year in Denver, Colorado. He also was afflicted with similar modesty, and when the honor with me was presented to me, he declined. One of the representatives from his State, however, said to him, so he declares in his speech: "You old bald headed man, do you think that this is
A PERSONAL COMPLIMENT
To you? No. It is a compliment to the great commonwealth which you represent," and in that view I accept this position as a compliment to the State of Nevada, which has produced a Stewart and a Jones. [Applause.]
Now, my friends, we are here for business, and we are here at a most critical time, to consider a question which not only involves the mining States of the Union, but the entire country and the world at large. For we have the satisfaction of knowing that the agitation which we urge is fraught with benefit not only to the section which we represent, but to the entire country, and to the world at large. You all know the history of the silver agitation in this country. You know how the silver dollar was surreptitiously dropped from the Mint Act in 1873. You know how long it was before the country woke to the consciousness of that fatal Act, and how determined the agitation was which arose in favor of the restoration of that time-honored dollar. You know that
